

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

IT will be readily admitted by those who have investigated the history of the English language, that the most obscure, and yet in many respects, the most interesting period of its progress, is that during which the Anglo-Saxon language, already from the time of Edward the Confessor pre-disposed to change, was at length broken up, and clothed with those new characteristics, in which the germs of our modern tongue are found. That this important change was occasioned solely, or even in a large proportion, by the influence of the Norman invaders, is a proposition specious indeed, but wholly untenable ; and it has been argued with every appearance of probability, that the same effects would have been produced, had William and his followers remained on their native soil¹. Assuming this to be true, it will necessarily follow, that such an organic change in the structure of a language must have been very gradual¹, and effected by certain and determinate laws, so that to attempt to fix the exact date of the commencement of "English," is, from the nature of circumstances, quite impracticable. At the same time, it may fairly be inferred, that since within limited data this progressive change becomes more and more apparent, it will be possible by a comparison of the literary monuments still existing, to form conclusions not very wide of the truth, as to the periods when the features of our language in various stages became more distinctly marked. A recent and sound critic has observed, that "the stage of language is not to be measured by its date, but by its structure," and that Anglo-Saxon would end and Semi-Saxon begin, "not at any given year, but at that date when certain grammatical inflections disappear, and certain characters of a more advanced stage are introduced²." It is important, moreover, to remark, that the preponderance of these, and not the occasional occurrence of them, will constitute the difference of the language.

The materials for tracing the progress of English from Anglo-Saxon subsequently to the year 1100 are to be found in sufficient abundance, to enable us, were they all accessible in print, to mark the succession of these changes with tolerable accuracy; for although during the twelfth century original literary compositions (especially in poetry)

¹ Campbell in the Essay prefixed to his edition of the British Poets, in 1819, has already confuted the hypothesis of Ellis (in Specimens of Early English Poetry, 8°. 1801, and copied by Todd, in his edition of Johnsons Dictionary, 1818.) who would fix the complete formation of English between the years 1180 and 1216, both of which dates are assumed on purely imaginary grounds. The adoption of such an arbitrary definition, or the notion of any sudden change, is justly repudiated by Campbell in the Essay referred to.

are extremely rare, yet numerous transcripts and translations from Anglo-Saxon and Latin works were made at that period, and are still preserved in manuscript, by which the grammatical and verbal alterations then gaining ground are easily to be distinguished¹. The author of the "Introduction to the Literature of Europe," has remarked with justice, that "when we compare the earliest English of the thirteenth century with the Anglo-Saxon of the twelfth, it seems hard to pronounce, why it should pass for a separate language, rather than a modification or simplification of the former²." The same denomination, we know, was anciently applied to both, for the language was always called English by those who wrote in it, in every century downwards, from the earliest period of Anglo-Saxon literature to the time of Dunbar and Lyndsay³. It was, in fact, substantially the same throughout, but at different periods more or less affected by the changes in its grammatical inflections and orthography, as well as by the omission of certain words and phrases, and the introduction of others derived from foreign sources. But as in architecture it has been found advisable to adopt terms to designate particular periods of style, so in regard to the English language various terms have been used to discriminate the periods during which it existed in a more or less advanced stage. It is unnecessary to notice the discrepancies of different writers on the relative duration of these periods, but as a matter of convenience, perhaps the following divisions may be suggested :—

Early English	—— 1230	—— 1330.
Middle English	—— 1330	—— 1500.
Later English	—— 1500	—— 1600.

It is to the first of these periods that the poem of Lazamon (or Layamon) belongs, and the preceding remarks have been made with a view to point out the value and importance of a poetical composition of such great length, (now for the first time published,) to assist us in forming a better notion of the state of our language at the end of the twelfth and beginning of the thirteenth centuries, than could be obtained from the short and scattered specimens already in print².

² The chief of these may be briefly stated to be,—the latter part of the Saxon Chronicle, as it exists in the Laud MS. (no part of which could have been written earlier than 1121); the Homily of St. Edmund, in Thorpes Analec̃ta; the Bestiary and Proverbs of Alfred, printed in the Reliquiæ An-

By the publication also of both the texts preserved of Lazamons work, additional light is thrown on the subject ; for as the second text was undoubtedly composed many years after the former, and immediately founded on it, we are enabled to perceive at once the still further change the language had undergone during that interval, and note to what extent the diction and forms of the earlier text had become obsolete or unintelligible.

That this work of our English Ennius¹ should not earlier have received the attention it would seem to claim, can scarcely be wondered at, when we recollect at how recent a period the structure of our language has been critically studied or understood ; and the extraordinary errors of Johnson, Warton, and other popular writers, can be excused only on similar grounds. Archbishop Usher appears to have been the first, who refers to the manuscript of Lazamon, and he does so merely for the orthography of the names of the Bishops sent over to King Lucius². Slight as this notice is, it was sufficient to obtain the poet, after the interval of nearly a century, a longer notice in Nicolsons *Historical Library*³, but coupled with the erroneous statement, (borrowed from Wanley,) that the author

The Ormulum is said to be nearly ready for publication, and the Rule of Nuns is in the press.

merely translated the Latin work of Geoffrey of Monmouth into "Norman-English." We next meet with him in Tanners Bibliotheca Britannica, in 1748, but the account there given is copied from the faulty note prefixed by James to the Cottonian MS. Caligula, A. IX.; and although many writers of later date, as Tyrwhitt, Ellis, Ritson, Mitford, Campbell, Turner, and Conybeare, have severally commented on or quoted from Lazamons poem, yet its peculiar value in a philological point of view appears to have remained but little known up to the period when the Society of Antiquaries determined on its publication¹.

Having premised thus much, it is requisite to turn to the work itself, and inquire, as far as we are able, 1. who was the author,—2. from what sources his work was compiled,—3. the period of its composition,—and lastly, the style and metrical structure of the poem, as well as the dialect in which it is written, and grammatical forms.

1. Of the author we possess unfortunately only the scanty information given us by himself in the prefatory lines to his poem. In these he tells us, that his name was Lazamon (in the later text broadened in sound to Laweman), and the name of his father *Leovenath*² (Leuca, in the later text);

² Traces of these names may be found in documents of the beginning of

that he was a priest¹, and dwelt (wonede) at Ernleze, at a church² on the banks of the Severn, near Radstone, where he "read books." Several writers have inferred from this passage, that Ernley or Redstone was the place of his birth³, but there seems no ground whatever for such a supposition. His profession as a priest, and his residence at the church of Ernley, are both explained by the line which follows, "ther he bock radde," i. e. where he was accustomed to read the services of the church; and unless we so interpret it⁴, there will appear no apparent connection between his occupation and the place of his abode. From the mention of Redstone, it might perhaps be inferred, that the church alluded to was the ancient chapel the thirteenth century. Lagemans occurs in the Fines, 8 Joh. co. Cambr. vol. i. p. 319. and Roger, son of Levenoth, or Levenethe, is mentioned in the Pipe Roll, 3 Joh. co. Essex et Hert. p. 155, and in the Fine Roll, 6 Joh. co. Essex.

² "at æðelen are chirechen." In the Latin version given by Nash, in his Worcestershire, vol. i. p. 41. this line is rendered "in patrimonio suo erat minister ecclesiæ," and Mr. Wright, in his Biographia Britannica, Anglo-Norman period, p. 440. translates it "in the domain of a church." I cannot agree to either of these interpretations, nor indeed will the grammatical construction of the line admit of them, since æðelen is an adjective here. Cf. vv. 42, 159, 18531, 21132, 23010, 2444, 25474. I can as little assent to the sense assigned by Wright to the line, "and fiede on boc-felle," a little lower, which he renders, "and fell zealously on the book." Whatever sense we may assign to the weak verb fiede, the boc-felle certainly signifies the parchment Lazamon wrote on. See Notes, p. 438.

attached to the hermitage overhanging the western bank of the Severn at Redstone Ferry, just at the point where the parishes of Lower Arley and Astley join, and which, as appears from the Habingdon MS. quoted by Nash, was formerly a spot of considerable note¹. But after an attentive consideration of the passage, it would seem clear, that the words "near Redstone" were inserted expressly to distinguish the Ernley here mentioned, (Lower Arley, otherwise Arley Regis, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east from Bewdley, in Worcestershire,) from another Ernley, not many miles distant, on the other side of the Severn, in Staffordshire, now called Over or Upper Arley.

Of the church of Lower Arley at this early period we know as little as of its priest, and all that is to be learnt of its history is, that it was inseparably annexed to the benefice of Martley, in the same county, whose rectors were the patrons of the living². No presentation, however, is on record earlier than the reign of Edward the First, nor is there any information as to the date of the erection of the church at Lower Arley; but from Laža-

¹ Nash, ubi supr. A similar chapel, study, and other apartments, were anciently attached to a hermitage existing higher up the Severn at Blackstone rock, near Bewdley, of which a plan is given by Stukeley, in his Itin. Curios. fol. 1724. pl. 14.

² Nash, vol. i. p. 37. The Lords of Martley were also the Lords of Arley, but the advowson of Martley formed part of the possessions of the Abbey of Cormeilles, in the diocese of Lisieux. In a suit between the Abbot and Hugh le Despencer, Lord of Martley, in 19 Edw. I. [1291] reference is made to a presentation by previous abbots of Cormeilles to the church of Martley, as early as the reign of John. See the Cartulary of Newent, MS. Add. 15,668. fol. 3. The earliest notice of a proprietor of Martley occurs in the Close Roll, 7 Joh. [1205] in which the sheriff of Worcestershire is ordered to give seisin of Martele to William de Fruges (probably a Norman), which had previously belonged to his brother Wales'. Rot. Claus. p. 58. In the 8 Rich. I. the villate of Marteley belonged to the King, and paid a tallage of 40s. Madox, Hist. Ercheq. vol. i. p. 704.

mons own testimony it may be presumed to have existed previous to the year 1200.

Before quitting this branch of the inquiry, it must be observed, that the later text of the poem omits all mention of the church, and substitutes the reading, "he dwelt at Ernley, with the good knight, upon Severn." This reading has been adopted by Mr. Guest¹, but it would seem to be altogether a false interpretation, or a mere invention of the compiler of the later text; at all events it is not of sufficient authority to supersede the statement in the earlier copy.

2. The sources from which Lazamon compiled his work are stated by himself to be three in number; namely, a book in English, made by Saint Bede; another in Latin, made by Saint Albin, and Austin; and a third made by a French clerk named Wace, who presented it to Queen Eleanor² (consort of Henry the Second). These three³ books, he tells us, he obtained by travelling himself in search of them "wide over the land," and having succeeded in getting them together, he proceeded to incorporate the three into his own work. The first of the authorities here mentioned is generally understood to be the Anglo-Saxon translation of Bedes Ecclesiastical History, attributed to Alfred; but so far from making it form an integral portion of his own poem, or even occupy a prominent place in it, he seems to have taken nothing from it except the story of Pope Gregory and the Anglo-Saxon captives at Rome¹. Indeed in several instances he is quite at variance with Bede, even when not translating from Wace². The second work, ascribed to St. Albin and Austin, is more difficult to identify, nor is it easy to understand how St. Austin, who died in the year 604, and Albinus³, Abbot of St. Austins at Canterbury, who died in 732, should be conjoined in the same work. All that is recorded of the literary undertakings of Albinus,—“vir per omnia doctissimus,” as he is styled by Bede,—is the large share he had in contributing materials for the *Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum*⁴. Either therefore by some mental confusion Lazamon has made two persons out of one, or,—what is more probable,—he has not distinguished between the contributor⁵ and the writer, and having first erroneously given the Anglo-Saxon version of the work to Bede, he proceeds next to assign to Albinus and Austin (whose Interrogatories inserted in the first book seem to favor this notion) the Latin text of the Ecclesiastical History. If this supposition be correct, (and errors of equal magnitude committed by Lazamon are pointed out in the Notes⁶,) we are simply to understand, that the first two books procured by him, to write the history he contemplated, were copies of the Latin and Anglo-Saxon texts of Bede. The third authority named, is the Anglo-Norman metrical chronicle of the Brut, translated from the well-known Historia Brito-

num of Geoffrey of Monmouth by Wace¹, and completed in the year 1155, which embraces the history of Britain, fabulous or true, from the destruction of Troy, and subsequent arrival of Brutus, to the death of king Cadwallader, in A.D. 689. This is the work to which Lazamon is mainly indebted, and upon which his own is founded throughout, although he has exercised more than the usual license of amplifying and adding to his original. The extent of such additions may be readily understood from the fact, that Waces Brut is comprised in 15,300 lines², whilst the poem of the English versifier extends to nearly 32,250, or more than double. These additions and amplifications, as well as the more direct variations from the original, are all pointed out in the Notes to the present edition, but their general character, as well as some of the more remarkable instances, may be properly noticed here. In the earlier part of the work they consist principally of the speeches placed in the mouths of different personages, which are often given with quite a dramatic effect. The dream of Arthur, as related by himself to his companions in arms³, is the creation of a mind of a higher order than is apparent in the creeping rhymes of more recent chroniclers, and has a title, as Turner remarks, to be considered really poetry, because entirely a fiction of the imagination¹. The text of Wace is enlarged throughout², and in many passages to such an extent, particularly after the birth of Arthur, that one line is dilated into twenty; names of persons and localities are constantly supplied, and not unfrequently interpolations occur of entirely new matter, to the extent of more than an hundred lines. Lazamon often embellishes and improves on his copy³; and the meagre narrative of the French poet is heightened by graphic touches and details, which give him a just claim to be considered, not as a mere translator, but as an original writer.

¹ This name was misread Wate by James, Wanley, Tanner, and Nicolson, and erroneously supposed to refer to Walter Mapes, Archdeacon of Oxford. The error was corrected by Warton and Tyrwhitt, and subsequently by the Abbé de la Rue, in the Archæologia, vol. xii. where an account of Waces writings was first given at length. Fuller information may be found in the Essais sur les Bardes, par l'Abbé de la Rue, tom. ii. 1834, and Hist. Litt. de la France, tom. xvii. p. 615.

² Le Roman de Brut, par Wace, avec un Commentaire et des Notes par Le Roux de Lincy. 2 tom. 8°. Rouen, 1836-1838. It is to be regretted that the editor has not constructed a more correct text. A good edition of Wace is still a desideratum, and the evidence of Lazamon is especially valuable in fixing the correct reading of his original.

Among the more remarkable additions of Lazamon may be pointed out:—the episode of Hirelgas and Evelin⁴;—the legend respecting the birth of Gloi and foundation of Gloucester⁵;—the narrative of the settlement of the Picts in Caithness, and introduction of the Irish language among them⁶;—the building of Coningsburgh⁷;—the statement relative to Conans expedition to Brittany⁸, and the account of the voyage and disastrous fate of Oriene (the Ursula of the Cologne legend) and her eleven thousand companions⁹;—the curious story of the rebellion of the churls of East Anglia, headed by the twin-brothers Ethelbald and Ælfwald,

² In some few instances Lazamon has purposely omitted passages of the French original, but in general they are very short and insignificant. The most striking are—the notice of the death of Labienus, vol. i. p. 323; a string of nautical terms, vol. iii. p. 32; the account of King Ritons mantle, trimmed with the beards of vanquished monarchs, vol. iii. p. 37; and the legend respecting the disposition of Cadwalans corpse within a brazen figure, vol. iii. p. 277.

king of Ireland, and Ælcus, king of Iceland, to Arthur¹;—the curious particulars relative to the foundation of the Round Table²;—the long and interesting narrative of the combat of Arthur with Frolle, king of France³;—the details of Arthurs combat with the giant, on Mount St. Michel; his subsequent battle with the Emperor Lucius, and fatal issue of the conflict with Modred⁴;—the stratagem of Gurmund to get possession of Cirencester⁵;—the story at length of Brian, his interview with his sister Galarne, under the disguise of a pilgrim, and death of Pelluz, the astrologer⁶;—the insertion concerning the submission of Penda to Cadwalan, and marriage of the latter to Pendas sister Helen⁷;—the death of Oswald, the battle of Oswy and Penda, and death of the former⁸;—the tradition as to the cause of Cadwalans death, and account of Inas visit to Rome, and the establishment of the Romescot or Peters-pence⁹;—with numerous other passages of minor importance.

That Lazamon was indebted for some of these legends to Welsh traditions not recorded in Geoffrey of Monmouth or Wace, is scarcely to be questioned, and they supply an additional argument in support of the opinion, that the former was not a mere inventor. Many circumstances incidentally mentioned by Lazamon, are to be traced to a British origin, as for instance, the notice of Queen Judons death¹⁰; the mention of Taliesin, and his conference with *Kinbelin*¹¹; the traditionary legends relative to Arthur¹²; the allusions to several prophecies of *Merlin*¹³; and the names of various personages, which do not appear in the Latin or French writers. References are occasionally made to works extant in the time of Lazamon, but which are not now to be recognised. Thus in his account of the reign of Dunwallo Molmutius, he alludes to many marvellous things told of him in "books". So also in the notice of the origin of the name Wall-brook, in London, the "English Book" is cited as an authority for it¹. We should naturally suppose this to mean the Anglo-Saxon Bede, or the Saxon-Chronicle, but no mention of the story occurs in either. Again, in describing the altered state of Caerleon, Lazamon writes, "Some books say truly, that the burgh was bewitched, and that is well seen, that it be sooth". In another place, speaking of the British King Carric, he tells us, that men threw contempt and derision on him, and called him Kenric, and "in many books" his name was still so written². From these and other passages, it may be reasonable to conclude, that the author of the poem had a mind richly stored with legendary lore, and had availed himself, to a considerable extent, of the information to be derived from written sources. We know that he understood both French and Latin, and when we consider that these varied branches of knowledge were combined in the person of a humble priest of a small church in one of the midland counties, it would seem to be no unfair inference, that the body of the clergy, and, perhaps, the upper classes of the laity, were not in so low a state of ignorance, at the period when Lazamon wrote, as some writers have represented.

3. The date of the composition of Lazamon's poem is of great interest, but unhappily, is not free from the obscurity which seems to attend all early remains in a vernacular language. It would appear at first almost impossible, for an historical composition of more than 30,000 lines to have been written, without some incidental allusion being made to personages living at the time; and it would seem that the author had purposely abstained from giving us this desirable information. A single line might have sufficed to tell us all we want to know; but after the most careful scrutiny of the work, it must be acknowledged, that it is only by inference we can assume the period when the author lived. By the general stream of writers from the time of Wanley, Lazamon has been usually assigned to the reign of Henry the Second, or the close of the twelfth century; and the more precise date of 1180 is assumed by Ellis for the completion of the work, yet on grounds quite unsatisfactory¹.

If we look into the poem itself, the only passages that can be gleaned, which bear any allusion to contemporary events, are few in number, and not sufficiently precise. The lines on the ruined state of the city of Leicester², no doubt refer to its destruction by the forces of Henry II. under the Justiciary Richard de Lucy, in the year 1173³. Another passage mentions the change in the pronunciation of the name of York, made by the northern men, which is stated to have taken place "not long before⁴." A third passage contains an account of the establishment of the Rome-feoh or Peter-pence, and a doubt is expressed by the writer as to the continuance of the payment¹. This will correspond extremely well with the date of 1205, at which time, it appears, that King John and his nobles resisted the Popes mandate for its collection². Now if we turn to the prefatory lines at the commencement of the poem, we shall find that this date is, to a certain degree, corroborated. Lazamon tells us, that Wace presented his book when finished "to the noble Eleanor, who was Henrys queen, the mighty king." It would appear quite certain, that such an expression could not have been used, had Henry then been living, and this will bring us to the year 1189³.

² See the passage from Robert of Gloucester, quoted in the Notes, vol. iii. p. 434. This fact is confirmed by the letters addressed by King John, in May 1206, to the clergy convened at St. Albans, forbidding them to take any measures under the Popes authority, towards the payment of the Romescot, which he states to be "non solum in laicorum gravem perniciem, sed etiam in totius regni nostri intolerabile dispendium." Foedera, vol. i. pt. i. p. 94. Wilkins, Concilia, vol. i. p. 514. It may perhaps be objected, that these lines of Lazamon may equally well apply to Henry the Seconds reign, since in 1164 the king ordered the payment of Peter-pence to be discontinued, and again in 1169, when strict injunctions were issued to the same effect. See Lytelton, Hist. Hen. II. vol. ii. pp. 401, 528, Hist. Litt. de la Fr. tom. xiv. p. 541. But these dates would seem too early for the composition of the poem, according to the judgment of the best-informed Anglo-Saxon scholars, and, moreover, are at variance with the date of 1189, established from Lazamons preface.

³ Ritson comes the nearest to this date, but wholly by accident. In his preface to the Ancient English Metrical Romances, 1802, p. lxxiv, he assumes the year 1188, as a date at which "the work of Lazamon may be thought to have been finished," but in p. lxx he assigns the author to the reign of Henry II., and in p. lxxxiii to "about the time of Henry II. or Richard I." Mr. Wright, in discussing the passage mentioned in the text, is inclined to infer from it, that Lazamon wrote either at the end of Henry the Seconds reign, or no long time after his death. Biogr. Brit. A.-Norm. Period, p. 439. Yet in another place, he speaks of the "age of Layamon, in the earlier half of the thirteenth century." Biogr. Brit. A.-Sar. Period, p. 106.

But we may perhaps advance a step further, and fairly presume, that Eleanor herself was then dead ; and as her decease took place at an advanced age in 1204, the date will correspond very accurately with the time when the Rome-feoh was forbidden. It was not till the accession of John that the Queen-mother retired to her own territories of Aquitaine, and it would seem improbable, that Lazamon would mention her in such brief terms, had she been living at the time in England, with the powers of sovereignty intrusted to her charge. After all, it must be admitted, that the passage is not perfectly conclusive ; but joined to other circumstances, and the internal evidence afforded by the language of Lazamons poem, it would appear most probable, that it was written or completed at the beginning of the thirteenth century. In forming this opinion it is satisfactory to be able to adduce the authority of some recent writers, who have come to the same conclusion from different premises. Mr. Sharon Turner writes, " We must place Lazamon after 1155 ; and as Normandy was not severed from England till after 1200, I would not date the rise of English composition before that period, because the Great, whose encouragement has been the chief producing cause of our literature, were not previously interested to reward any other than the Anglo-Norman, in which they had been studiously educated¹." In a note he subjoins, in regard to the date of Lazamons work, "I would postpone it till after 1200." So also Mr. Guest, in his work on English Rhythms, says, that although Lazamons poem may have been written before 1200, yet, that he would rather fix it a few years after that date¹; his opinion being influenced, apparently, by the use of mixed rhyme, of which he refers to Lazamons work as containing the earliest English example. By Dr. Lappenberg likewise, and Dr. Grundtvig, Lazamon is placed in the thirteenth century².

4. The style and metrical arrangement of the poem, together with its dialect and grammatical structure, remain to be considered. It is admitted by all, that however questionable the influence of the Norman conquest on the Anglo-Saxon language may have been, yet that no doubt ~~can exist~~ as to the effect produced by it on the vernacular poetry. The patronage afforded by the nobles to the Anglo-Norman minstrels, and the banishment of the Anglo-Saxon tongue from the vicinity of the court for upwards of a century, must inevitably have caused that comparative dearth of original compositions during the close of the eleventh and the greater part of the following century, which is now so apparent. A more direct proof of the predominance of the Anglo-Norman literature is this, that when we again meet with the efforts of the native Muse to raise herself from the oblivion into which she had been cast, we no longer find in them the same characteristics as before, but a simpler style has in great measure usurped the place of those highly figurative forms and frequent inversions, which distinguish the Anglo-Saxon poems of an earlier period. It is considered by Turner as a fortunate circumstance, that such a change should have taken place, and he attributes it mainly to the introduction of rhyme by the Normans, which was gradually adopted into the vernacular poetry¹. It is, however, too much to assume with Tyrwhitt², that English poetry was wholly indebted to the Normans for this prevalent feature in its structure; for it is certain, that rhyme was known and practised to some extent before the Conquest³, although it is probable, that it was seldom or never used in compositions of a higher or graver cast.

The fact itself of a translation of Waces poem by a priest of one of the midland counties, is sufficient evidence how widely the knowledge of the writings of the trouvères was dispersed, and it would appear a natural consequence, that not only the outward form of the Anglo-Norman versification, but also that many of the terms used in the original would be borrowed. This, however, is but true in a very trifling degree, compared with the extent of the work; for if we number the words derived from the French (even including some that may have come directly from the Latin), we do not find in the earlier text of Lazamons poem so many as fifty⁴, several of which were in usage, as appears by the Saxon Chronicle, previous to the middle of the twelfth century. Of this number the later text retains about thirty, and adds to them rather more than forty⁵, which are not found in the earlier version ; so that if we reckon ninety words of French origin in both texts, containing together more than 56,800 lines, we shall be able to form a tolerably correct estimate how little the English language was really affected by foreign converse, even as late as the middle of the thirteenth century.

It is a remarkable circumstance, that we find preserved in many passages of Lazamons poem the spirit and style of the earlier Anglo-Saxon writers. No one can read his descriptions of battles and scenes of strife, without being reminded of the Ode on Æthelstans victory at *Brunanburh*¹. The ancient mythological genders of the sun and moon are still unchanged²; the memory of the witena-gemot has not yet become extinct³, and the neigh of the hængest still seems to resound in our ears⁴. Very many phrases are purely Anglo-Saxon⁵, and with slight change, might have been used in Cædmon or Ælfric. A foreign scholar and poet, versed both in Anglo-Saxon and Scandinavian literature, has declared, that tolerably well read as he is in the rhyming chronicles of his own country and of others, he has found Lazamons beyond comparison the most lofty chevetaine, conseil, contre, cri, delaie, eyr, failede, fol, folie, gile, gisarme, grace, granti, guyse, harsun, honure, hostage, manere, nonnerie, paide, pais, paisi, parc, passi, pensiles, prisune, route, sarevi, seine, tavel, tresur, truage, tumbé, etc.

⁵ It has been remarked, that but few similes occur in Anglo-Saxon poetry. In Lazamon also they are not numerous, and chiefly borrowed from field-sports or natural objects, such as the wild-boar, wild-crane, the fox, the goat, hail, etc. The lion is frequently alluded to, as also in Wace. Another feature worth notice, consists in the numerous synonyms applied (as in A.-Saxon) to a man or warrior; and also the number of terms used to express motion. Thus we have in the later text to represent the verb lifen, the terms come, go, glide, passi, ride, sie, saily, wende, and wonie, besides the forms lipi and lipe.

and animated in its style, at every moment reminding the reader of the splendid phraseology of Anglo-Saxon verse¹. It may also be added, that the colloquial character of much of the work renders it peculiarly valuable as a monument of language, since it serves to convey to us, in all probability, the current speech of the writers time as it passed from mouth to mouth.

The structure of Lazamons poem consists partly of lines in which the alliterative system of the Anglo-Saxons is preserved, and partly of couplets of unequal length rhiming together. Many couplets indeed occur, which have both of these forms, whilst others are often met with which possess neither. The latter therefore must have depended wholly on accentuation, or have been corrupted in transcription. The relative proportion of each of these forms is not to be ascertained without extreme difficulty, since the author uses them everywhere intermixed, and slides from alliteration to rhyme or from rhyme to alliteration in a manner perfectly arbitrary. The alliterative portion, however, predominates on the whole greatly over the lines rhiming together, even including the imperfect or assonant terminations, which are very frequent². In the structure of Lazamons rhyme

² This license may have been partly borrowed from the French, by whom it was used from the commencement of the twelfth century, both in the poetry of the northern and southern provinces. See a paper by Raynouard, in the Journal des Savans, Juillet, 1833. Thus in Lazamon we meet with such rhimes as sungen and kinge,—londe and uunde—ræde and neode,—gold and hond,—mare and dure,—clubbe and rugge,—crafte and leofte,—fure and fore, with many others of a similar kind. Of another class are such assonances as soðe and oðer,—imaked and for-saken,—ibursted and purste,—atter and hatte,—vareð and scare,—Glochæstre and feste,—rideð and abide,—water and fæht, in all of which cases the final syllable of one line seems to become quiescent, or to be slurred over in recitation. The same usage in later poems of the thirteenth century is noticed by Guest, Tyrwhitt thought he could perceive occasionally an imitation of the octosyllabic measure of the French original, whilst Mitford finds in it the identical triple measure of Piers Ploughman. The subject however has been discussed more fully, and with greater learning, by Mr. Guest, in his History of English Rhythms, in which he shews, that the rhiming couplets of Lazamon are founded on the models of accentuated Anglo-Saxon rhythms of four, five, six, or seven accents. A long specimen is given by him, in vol. ii. pp. 114-124, with the accents marked, both of the alliterative and rhiming couplets, by which it is seen, that those of six and five accents are used most frequently, but that the poet changes at will from the shortest to the longest measure, without the adoption of any consecutive principle. In the later text, as might be expected, both the alliteration and the rhyme are often neglected, but these faults may probably be often attributed to the errors of the scribe.

With respect to the dialect in which Lazamons work is written, we can have little difficulty in assuming it to be that of North-Worcestershire, the locality in which he lived¹. But as both the texts of the poem in their present state exhibit the forms of a strong western idiom, the following interesting question immediately arises, how

vol. i. p. 316. The more obvious liberties in the rhyme of Lazamon are to elide the final n of any rhiming syllable, and to rhyme together syllables in nd and ng.

such a dialect should have been current in one of the chief counties of the kingdom of Mercia? The origin of this kingdom, as Sir Francis Palgrave has remarked¹, is very obscure, but there is reason to believe that a mixed race of people contributed to form and occupy it. We may therefore conclude, either that the Hwiccas were of Saxon rather than Angle origin, or that subsequent to the union of Mercia with the kingdom of Wessex, the western dialect gradually extended itself from the south of the Thames as far as the courses of the Severn, the Wye, the Tame, and the Avon, and more or less pervaded the counties of Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, Herefordshire, Warwickshire, and Oxfordshire.

That this western dialect extended throughout the Channel counties from east to west, and was really the same as the southern, appears from a remarkable passage in Giraldus Cambrensis² (written in 1204), in which he says, "As in the southern parts of England, and chiefly about Devonshire, the language now appears more unpolished (incomposita), yet in a far greater degree savoring of antiquity, —the northern parts of the island being much corrupted by the frequent incursions of the Danes and Norwegians, —so it observes more the propriety of the original tongue, and the ancient mode of speaking. Of this you have not only an argument, but a certainty, from the circumstance, that all the English books of Bede, Rabanus³, king Alfred,

Even as late as the seventeenth century, the marks of the southern dialect, as pointed out by Gil, in his Logonomia Anglica, 1619, p. 16, namely, v for f, z for s, etc., are precisely those of the west of England.

³ Rabanus Maurus is claimed by some writers as a native of Ireland, but by others as a German. He was a disciple of Alcuin, and became or any others, will be found written in the forms proper to this idiom." It is difficult at present to understand how far Giraldus meant to assimilate together the spoken language of Devonshire and the written works of Alfred and others, but in all probability the chief difference must have consisted in pronunciation, and in the disregard of certain grammatical forms, which would not of themselves constitute a separate dialect. There can be no doubt, that the written language previous to the Conquest was more stable in its character, and more observant of orthographical and grammatical accuracy than the spoken; but it is impossible to collate together Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, without being struck with the occasional use of anomalous forms, which are termed by grammarians—rather too arbitrarily perhaps—corruptions¹. Without therefore going so far as Ritson (whose opinion of itself was little worth), that "the vulgar English of the period was essentially different from the Saxon used in the charters of the Conqueror²," or Sir Francis Palgrave, who thinks, "that a colloquial language approaching nearly to modern English, seems to have existed concurrently with the more cultivated language, which we call Anglo-Saxon³," there are many reasons to induce us to believe, that the spoken language in the reign of Edward the Confessor did not materially differ from that which is found in manuscripts a century later.

That the dialects of the western, southern and midland counties contributed together to form the language of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and consequently to lay the foundation of modern English, seems unquestionable, and it is remarkable, that the same period is pointed out by philologists for the origin of Italian from the ancient and varied dialects of that country¹.

The language of Lazamon belongs to that transition period in which the groundwork of Anglo-Saxon phraseology and grammar still existed, although gradually yielding to the influence of the popular forms of speech. We find in it, as in the later portion of the Saxon Chronicle, marked indications of a tendency to adopt those terminations and sounds which characterise a language in a state of change, and which are apparent also in some other branches of the Teutonic tongue. The use of a as an article;—the change of the Anglo-Saxon terminations a and an into e and en, as well as the disregard of inflections and genders;—the masculine forms given to neuter nouns in the plural;—the neglect of the feminine terminations of adjectives and pronouns, and confusion between the definite and indefinite declensions;—the introduction of the preposition to before infinitives, and occasional use of weak preterites of verbs and participles instead of strong;—the constant occurrence of en for on in the plurals of verbs, and frequent elision of the final e;—together with the uncertainty in the rule for the government of prepositions,—all these variations, more or less visible in the two texts of *Lazamon*², combined with the vowel-changes, (which are numerous, although not altogether arbitrary³), will shew at once the progress made in the course of two centuries, in departing from the ancient and purer grammatical forms, as found in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts.

One of the most striking peculiarities in the earlier text of Lazamon, is what has been termed *nunnation*¹, consisting of the addition of a final n to certain cases of nouns and adjectives, to some tenses of verbs, and to several other parts of speech. The occurrence of these forms is by no means uniform or constant, and in numerous instances of final rhyme, might have been used for the sake of euphony; but there still remain so many examples of this final n, not authorised by the rules of Anglo-Saxon grammar, as to render it probable, that its use was restricted to the dialect in which the poem is written. In regard to nouns, its usage is chiefly noticeable in the dative singular of masculines and neuters of the complex orders, and in the nominative singular of feminines; as also in the nominative singular and nominative and accusative plural of adjectives of the indefinite declension; and it would seem, that this anomaly was occasioned by the tendency of the dialect to adopt the weak declensions in preference to the strong. The same peculiarity is met with in some adjectival pronouns; in the genitive plural heoren, their; in many adverbs, and even in numerals and interjections². In verbs, the final n appears generally in the first person singular of the present tense, and third person singular of the preterite, but is occasionally found in the first and second persons of the past tense; the second and third persons singular of the present subjunctive; and the second person singular of the imperative mood. The former of these anomalies is accounted for by the ancient Teutonic form on, an, en, in the first person present tense, but with respect to the other tenses, particularly the preterites, it would be desirable to gain more information than we at present possess. In the later text, the n final is generally elided, even in regular forms, and therefore we should hardly expect to find in it any instances of nunnation, yet there are a few words, which, if not mere errors of the scribe, appear to retain the anomaly in question¹. It must be observed also, that there are many passages in the earlier text, in which this pleonastic n has been struck out or erased by a second hand, and sometimes by the first, so that it is manifest, that some doubt must have existed as to the propriety of its usage. The instances referred to are collected in a note subjoined².

² In respect to prepositions, it is remarkable that the final n is almost always found in Anglo-Saxon.

It has been already remarked, that both texts of Lazamon (especially the earlier) exhibit strong marks of a western dialect, which is perceptible in the termination of the present tense plural in th, and infinitives in i, ie, or y; the forms of the plural personal pronouns, heo, heore, heom; the frequent occurrence of the prefix i before past participles; the use of v for f; and prevalence of the vowel u for i or y, in such words as dude, hudde, hulle, putte, hure, etc. But on comparing the two texts carefully together, some remarkable variations are apparent in the later, which seem to arise, not from its having been composed at a more recent period, but from the infusion of an Anglian or Northern element into the dialect. Thus, for the initial sc of the first text, we almost always find in the later a simple s, in such words as sal, solde, sollen, same, sar, sende, seren, silde, sip, sonde, sop, srud, sufte, fresipe, etc. When sc occurs, it may be considered as the exception to the rule, and sometimes both forms are then met with¹. It has been asserted by a competent authority, that the presence of such forms may be considered as an unequivocal indication of the Anglian or Northumbrian dialect²; and that they are still universally prevalent in North Anglian, as they formerly were in Middle Anglian. It would not therefore seem improbable, that the later text of Lazamon may have been composed or transcribed in one of the counties conterminous to the Anglian border, and perhaps we might fix on the eastern side of Leicestershire as the locality.

² In nouns, sunen (i. 170), hæpen (i. 250), daȝen and ȝeren (ii. 610), folken (ii. 613), liuen (iii. 216); in adjectives, ucien (iii. 110), iquemen (iii. 210); in verbs, 1 p. pr. ȝifuen (ii. 478), wullen (iii. 113), halsin (iii. 294); 2 p. p. weoren (i. 313. ii. 329, 337), droȝen and of-sloȝen (ii. 268); 3 p. p. iherden (i. 138), græiðeden (i. 392), funden (i. 415), hehten (iii. 17), sturten (iii. 34), pohten (iii. 156), fuleden (iii. 221), bihoueden (iii. 242); 3 p. pr. sb. biðen (i. 147), weoren (ii. 123, 375, 460); in adverbs, uæsten (iii. 61), swipen (i. 215).

Some further peculiarities may be noticed in the later text, which are interesting in the history of our vernacular forms of speech. For the feminine pronoun heo, she, of the earlier text, it invariably reads 3eo or 3e'; and in the plural

¹ The only cases of sc in the later text are,—scapie, scecky, sceald (but also seald), scene, sceote, sceap (also seep), scere, scoldre (also soldre), and sceop, scopte (also sop, sipste), iscrud, scuke and scüttes. Two instances also occur in the later text of the third person present tense singular in es, namely, comes (i. 171), and sendes (iii. 19), which would denote a Northern influence.

² In the latter part of Robert of Gloucester, printed by Hearne from the Cotton MS. Cal. A. xi., he has most unwarrantably altered ssalde, ssolde, and similar forms, into sal and solde. The double initial ss, which, no doubt, was pronounced sh, is found also in the Kentish dialect of the Ayenbite of Inwyrt, in 1340, MS. Arund. 57.

hi or hii is constantly written for *heo*¹, and 3am or ham generally for the dat. and acc. heom. The dual form of the pronoun² is never found in the later text, and the unusual plural forms paie or paye are occasionally met with, which betray also an Anglian origin³. The disuse of n in infinitives, preterites and past participles is likewise deserving notice, but this feature is found also in Robert of Gloucester, which proves that the western dialect from an early period was less tenacious than the Mercian in retaining these terminations.

The orthography of both the manuscripts of Lazamons work is occasionally corrupt and variable, but may doubtless be attributed in great measure to the negligence of the transcribers, or variation of handwriting. The chief characteristic of the later text in regard to vowel-sounds, is the substitution of o for *a*⁴, and still more extensively for u, as may be seen in the Glossary. Sometimes an Anglian preference for the slender vowels is shown in such century, whilst in the recent edition of Piers Ploughman (1842), she seems universal. In the Ormulum we find 3ho, which approaches nearer to 3eo. The western and Mercian form of heo is still preserved as hoo in S. Staffordshire, S. Lancashire and Cheshire.

² It is retained in the Ormulum, in the Hule and Niztengale, MS. Cott. Cal. A. ix., and in Havelok, v. 1832.

³ In the Ormulum we have pegg and pegge, they, their, which have been supposed to be the earliest examples of these forms. But in the later Anglo-Saxon version of the New Testament, we find pæge, Joh. xii. 20. xiv. 12. Robert Mannyng invariably has pei or pai.

instances as gildene, kichene, þincheþ, sip̃te, etc. þilk occurs once only, and never in the earlier text. In the later, ea is frequently employed for e or æ; also a for e, and ou for u. In both texts eo interchanges with e, and in the later, with a, ea, and even with i, o and u. Words beginning with qu in the earlier text take cw in the later, which approaches more nearly to the Anglo-Saxon usage. The aspirate h is often added improperly in both texts, but more frequently in the second. As a final, it takes the place of c, in ah for *ac*¹; it also stands for ht, and, in both texts, for *ð*².

In respect to consonants, c and d are sometimes elided after l, n, r, in both texts, as is also g final after n, and in the middle of words; a peculiarity still preserved in the dialect of the west. We find in the first text d often used for ð, both medial and final. Ærd-e, or eard-e, for earth, is peculiar to it, and is never found in the later text. In the latter þ is often met with at the end of a word, in the place of *h*³. Other peculiarities, such as the occurrence of f and s for h, and sw for sc, are pointed out in the Glossarial Remarks appended to the third volume.

Besides the above, there are some variations of greater moment in the second text of Lazamon, which shew a change to have taken place in the language, in the course of half a century, to a far greater extent than a mere difference in orthography or pronunciation. There are many passages or words in the earlier text, which appear to have become unintelligible or obsolete to the compiler of the later; and these are uniformly omitted, or others supplied in their place. Several words also of the former, which do not present any apparent difficulty, are never used by the more recent writer, such as bærn, a child, bach, a valley, frið, peace, hæwares, spies, here-toze, a leader, fræinien, to ask, freoien, to set free, hærzien, to ravage, quecchen, to move, to-somme, together, and others. In numerous instances throughout the poem equivalents are introduced, as heuele for feie-siðe, harme for balewe, dead for feie, smot for at-ran, wile for stound, wilde for rimie, bold for steap, etc. On the other hand, we meet with some few words in the later text which are not in the earlier, as staleworþe, brave, mainliche, strongly, manede, manhood, cloþi, to clothe, drese, to fall down, glissenede, glistened, and some others, but chiefly of Norman origin.

The remaining peculiarities of dialect or orthography in both texts may be readily learnt from the Glossary, or are pointed out in the Glossarial Remarks.

Having thus discussed, as far as seems requisite, the more material subjects of inquiry, it only remains to give some description of the manuscripts from which Lazamons poem is published, and of the plan adopted in editing it.

The Cotton MS. Caligula A. ix. is a small quarto, written on vellum, containing 259 leaves, on the first of which is the autograph of Sir Robert Cotton. The volume consists of two portions; originally distinct, the former of which is occupied by the poem of Lazamon, written on 192 leaves¹, in the early part of the thirteenth century. On the fly-leaf at the beginning is a notice of the contents of the volume, in the handwriting of Richard James, Sir Robert Cottons librarian, but not very accurately drawn up². The writing is in double columns, containing generally thirty-four lines in each, and two hands are clearly apparent in it. The character at the commencement of the poem is in a neat uniform upright letter, and may be judged of by the annexed fac-simile, together with the ornamental initial letter (the only one in the manuscript), representing the author composing his work. This hand continues for several leaves, but at fol. 16^b, in the story of King Lear, a larger hand commences, which is more irregular and negligent. At fol. 86 the original hand is resumed, but only for two pages and a half, and the larger hand then continues to the end, and increases in irregularity as it proceeds. Both hands are coeval, as proved not only by their interchanging, but also by the rubricator having at the same time marked the initial letters of each line throughout, and added the marginal names in red. Previous also to the rubricators task, the text seems to have undergone a revision, as indicated by the plummet-marks in the margin, and by the corrections and erasures¹. In some few instances a third and later hand has noted errors, and supplied words. Towards the latter part of the work marginal notes in Latin occur, which in some instances have been mutilated by the binder. The remaining portion of the volume was written at a later period, probably at the close of Henry the Thirds reign, and also by two different hands. It contains, i., The Life of St. Josaphaz, in French verse, by Chardry, a writer of glicana, per quendam Laghamonem nomine, qui vixerit apud Ernleghe super Sabrinam post tempora Walteri Mapis, aut circa ea tempora, cum illius meminerit in præfatione." Smith in his Catalogue of the Cotton library, published in 1696, repeats nearly these words. Planta, in 1802, enlarges the notice, borrowing from Wanley, Lingg. Sept. Thesaur. vol. ii. p. 228, and De la Rue, Archæologia, vol. xii.

¹ At fol. 29^b. c. 2. floc is on an erasure, yet the f has been touched by the rubricator. Other instances may be seen at ff. 25^b. c. 2, 33. c. 1, 37^b. c. 2, and 49^b. c. 1.

the thirteenth century¹, f. 192; ii. La Vie des Sept Dormanz, by the same, f. 213^b; iii. A short Chronicle, in French prose, from the arrival of the Saxons to the reign of Henry III.², f. 226^b; iv. The curious English poem of the Hule and Niztengale, ascribed to John de Guldevorde³, f. 230; v. Several short English poems, chiefly of a religious or moral character⁴, f. 243; vi. Le Petit Plet, a moral dialogue in French verse between an old man and a young one, also by Chardry, f. 247⁵.

The second manuscript of Lazamon, which must be regarded as an abbreviated recension of his work, exists also in the Cottonian collection, marked Otho C. xiii., and is described by Smith in 1696, as “Historia Britonum, a Bruto ad Æthelstanum, veteri lingua Anglicana.” In the MS. Report on the Cotton library made in 1703⁶, it is entered as “Codex membranaceus in 4to, constans foliis 154.” In 1705 Wanley notices it more at length⁷, and

⁵ See a more detailed description of the latter part of this manuscript in M. Francisque Michels Rapport au Ministre de l'instruction publique, 1839, p. 186.

⁶ Preserved in the Department of MSS. British Museum. In a manuscript schedule of the MSS. drawn up in 1718 by Dr. R. Bentley, then Keeper of the Cotton library, this volume is said to contain 155 leaves, but, no doubt, a fly-leaf was included in this number, as in some other instances.

ascribes it to the reign of Henry III. He prints from it the introductory lines or preface, and remarks, that one leaf was wanting at the end. This volume was one of those that suffered damage in the disastrous fire, which took place at Ashburnham House on the 23rd October, 1731, and was supposed for a long time to have utterly perished. It is stated to be wanting by Casley, in 1734¹, and again by Planta, in 1802. On such authority, it is not surprising to find it spoken of by Tyrwhitt in 1774, as "destroyed by the fire," which is re-echoed by Ritson, who laments its loss. The fragments, however, were collected and partially restored, under the superintendence of the Rev. J. Forshall, then Keeper of the MSS., about the year 1827, and subsequently it was first mentioned in print by Mr. Thorpe, in his "Analecta," who calls it "only a bundle of fragments," but who prints from it the story of King Lear and his daughters.

The remains of this manuscript, which must originally have formed a good-sized quarto, or small folio, have since been inlaid and bound, by my direction, and now consist of 145 leaves, more or less imperfect. The first leaf, containing the preface and commencement of the poem, is, unfortunately, lost², as also the folios 137, 138, 141, 145, 148, 150, and all after 151. The first fifty leaves are much injured and contracted, but the manuscript then becomes tolerably fair to read, as far as fol. 110, where the injuries again commence, and increase so greatly, that large portions are often wanting, and at length mere fragments are left¹. The writing is in the same hand throughout, in a neat open letter, in double columns, each containing 38 lines; and initial letters of red, blue and gold are prefixed to each section of the poem. A favorable specimen, selected from the best-preserved portion of the volume, may be seen in the fac-simile annexed. In the present edition the deficiencies of the manuscript are indicated by dots. The sense may generally be supplied from the earlier text, except when several lines in succession are wanting. As to the quantity lost, on a rough calculation the poem when complete consisted of about 26,960 lines, of which about 2370 are wholly lost, and about 1000 more are in an injured state. The punctuation is very incorrect (as is the case also not unfrequently in the earlier text), but this has been remedied by adopting an uniform punctuation throughout the poem. It would appear also, from some passages, that this copy must have been partially written from recitation².

In editing the present work, the principal aim of the Editor has been to furnish the reader with as correct a representation of the text of the manuscripts as possible, and for this purpose the originals have been collated over carefully several times. As it was thought desirable also to preserve the character of the writing as nearly as letter-type would admit, the abbreviations have been preserved throughout, but they are few in number, and present no particular difficulty¹. An exception has been made in regard to the marginal notes in Latin, which are printed at length. The alterations by the second hand are invariably pointed out, and the errors of the original scribe corrected by conjectural readings at the foot of the page. In those cases, however, where a letter or more are certainly erroneous, and have been marked as such, by expunction, by the first hand, no notice is taken of them, except when anything may be learnt by the correction. In the translation, which was a secondary object, but which from its difficulty has occasioned considerable labor, it was judged best to adhere as literally as possible to the text, even in cases where a paraphrase would have been more easy, and, perhaps, less obscure. A few obsolete words are retained, on the authority of the writers of the sixteenth century, and some others, which in modern acceptance have a different meaning. In order to combine the two texts, the readings of the second are included within brackets, so as readily to shew the variations, without disturbing the narrative.

² So in vol. iii. p. 110, for þa ueie þær feollen of the early text, we have the reading þa weyes weren folle. This is confirmed also by the final syllable having occasionally been changed into a pronoun, as blisse he for blisse, i. 292, and dude he for dude, i. 295.

To illustrate the work, much pains have been taken. Not only has the text of Lazamon been compared carefully throughout with the printed edition of Waces Brut, but also with the two MSS. in the British Museum, Cott. Vitell. A. x. and Reg. 13 A. xxi.² These have been

² The Cottonian MS. is a fair and accurate copy written in the thirteenth century, but towards the latter end becomes somewhat abridged. The Royal MS. is the earliest in point of date, but presents a mixed text. For the first 52 lines it agrees with Wace, and then a totally different and abbreviated version of Geoffrey is introduced, which is continued as far as the birth of Arthur, when the text of Wace is resumed, and continues to the end. This anonymous version was evidently composed by a native of England, as appears from ff. 70^b, 74^b. There is a third copy of Wace in further collated with the Latin text of Geoffrey, in the Heidelberg edition of 1587, corrected by a fine MS. of the twelfth century, which formerly belonged to Margam Abbey, in Glamorganshire¹. With these, in addition, have been compared the Welsh translation of Geoffrey, falsely ascribed to Tysilio, translated by the Rev. Peter Roberts, in 1811, and the metrical versions of Geoffrey and Wace by Robert of Gloucester and Robert Mannyng². Bede having been cited by Lazamon as one of his authorities, the Ecclesiastical History of that writer has been consulted throughout, both in Anglo-Saxon and Latin. Several other works have been referred to, which exist only in manuscript, among which may be mentioned the French anonymous metrical version of Geoffrey, of the thirteenth century, preserved in MS. Harl. 1605; the Latin metrical version of the same period, dedicated to Cadioc, Bishop of Vannes, in Brittany, who died in 1254³; and another Latin version in hexameter verse, addressed to Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham, who held the see from 1153 to 1194⁴.

It was the Editors original intention to have formed a Glossary on the plan of those added to the Old German Romances of *Iwein*⁵ and Wigalois, by Benecke, which would have had the advantage of shewing the comparative frequency of certain forms ; but after writing near 50,000 slips, it was found impracticable to carry the design into execution, unless a separate volume were allotted to the Glossary. The comparatively easy task of a mere Verbal Index would not have furnished the information it was the Editors wish to afford, and a Glossary on a grammatical basis has therefore been substituted, which although it only contains a limited number of references, will be sufficient, it is hoped, to enable the meaning and structure of each word to be in general satisfactorily ascertained.

MS. Harl. 6508, but it is written in the fourteenth century, and is a faulty text, although occasionally preserving a better reading.

This copy is not perfect, but another is described in the Bulletin du Bibliophile, No. 16. 2^e ser. 1837, p. 495, from which we learn the name of the person to whom it is addressed. The author in the Catalogue of Cottonian MSS. is falsely supposed to have been Gildas, but in the other copy it is assigned to Alexander Neckham.

It is with much regret, that the completion of the work has been from unavoidable and painful causes so long protracted, but the delay has in some respects been of advantage. In the Glossarial Remarks the text throughout has been subjected to a careful consideration, and several errors in the translation corrected, to which the attention of the critic is invited. That some inaccuracies still remain, may with justice be ascribed to the difficulties of the language, which all who have hitherto attempted to grapple with, have occasionally failed to interpret. These inaccuracies, however, the Editor trusts are neither very numerous, nor so important as to impugn the general fidelity of his translation. He has devoted the leisure hours of many years of toil and anxiety to the work, and would feel a real satisfaction, if it should prove acceptable to those whose judgment is of value.

Grammatical Analysis of the Language.

THE articles used by Lazamon are two; an or a, (replaced generally in the later text by on,) and þe.

a is only the contracted form of an, and is prefixed to singular nouns and adjectives beginning with a consonant, in all cases and genders. In the phrases a lut ȝeren (i. 211) and a lute wiȝmen (ii. 65), as well as, in the later text, one feue wiȝmen and one feue winter (i. 86), the nouns are in the genitive case plural, according to the rule of Anglo-Saxon grammar. A similar construction takes place in a þusend (ii. 612), an hundrad pund (ii. 316); and this serves to explain a difficulty, that has perplexed many modern writers on grammar.

an or on is also the numeral one, and equivalent both to an and sum in Anglo-Saxon, like the former of which it is declined. It retains in the early text the forms of the gen. m. or n., the gen. and dat. f. and acc. m., but in the later the feminine forms are never used, and the others often neglected.

The definite article þe is declined nearly as in Anglo-Saxon, and the vowel in the oblique cases is much varied, as is the case in the more recent Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. The fem. forms *þeo*¹ or þa are not found in the later text, which also frequently neglects the gen. and dat. f. and expresses the gen. m. or n. often by *þis*². In the earlier text a distinction is generally, but not always, observed between the dat. m. and n. þon or þan and the acc. m. þene, but occasionally þane is used for both cases, as it is invariably in the second text for the accusative³. Only one instance of the gen. pl. þare is found in the later text (i. 142). In both texts an indeclinable þe is often used before all cases and genders, as in Anglo-Saxon; and owing to the gradual increase of its use in the fourteenth century, the earlier changes of termination became quite obsolete. The modern usage is clearly apparent in the later text of Lazamon, which reads þe kinges borle (iii. 20) and þe cwene cun (i. 15), for þes kinges birle and þere quene cun of the earlier text.

Occasionally we find the form of þaie or þai used for the definite article before plural nouns, which would seem to be an error, arising from some confusion between the article and the pronoun.

² Some obscurity is occasioned sometimes by this form, as it is the same with the gen. of the pronoun demonstrative þis. See the Glossary.

³ þane is also found in the Saxon Chron. a°. 1127, and the Hule and Niztengale, but þene in Kyng Horn and Robert of Gloucester.

The masculine nouns of the first or simple declension are few in number¹, and end in the nom. in e, gen. en, dat. and acc. e or en; pl. nom. acc. en or e, gen. en or ene, and dat. en, which is sufficiently close to the Anglo-Saxon model; the vowel a having been changed to *e*², and d. pl. um into *en*³, which regularly obtains in nouns and adjectives. Sometimes, but rarely, the nom. takes n, as iweren (i. 101), swiken (ii. 131). In the later text this declension is uniformly found with e in the singular, and in the plural es or e; a proof of the tendency of the language to convert the simple forms to complex.

The masculine nouns of the second or complex declension are declined with much regularity in the early text, ending in the nom. and acc. sing. in a consonant, or e, and forming the gen. in es, dat. e, nom. acc. pl. es or en, or e, or sometimes in all three⁴, (but generally in es), gen. en or ene, dat. in en or es, or both⁵. The chief variations are, that occasionally the dat. sing. takes *n*⁶, and the nom. gen. acc. pl. end in e. The later text sometimes omits the gen. termination, and in the dat. sing. never takes n; in the plural it always has es or *e*⁷, but in the dat. usually the former. Both texts occasionally have the gen. pl. in e or es, and omit the dat. sing. termination in e, as is sometimes the case even in Anglo-Saxon. The remaining masculine nouns may be considered irregular, as in Anglo-Saxon. In the early text they exhibit often the ancient indeclinable form, in both numbers, but also partake in the plural of the forms of the second declension. Instances of this may be found in the Glossary, under broßer, fæder, sune, foi, seond, freond, winter, etc.⁸

Feminine nouns both of the simple and complex order are much alike in their terminations. All the cases in the singular end in e, but in the earlier text take n

² Traces of the primitive vowel still remain in some of the simple nouns.

³ Even in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts on and en are frequently found for um. The latter form became the regular Semi-Saxon en.

⁵ As axen, axes, clareken, clarkes, cnihten, cnihtes, etc.

⁶ In aluen, aßen, buren, cnihten, eorlen, Goden, kingen, omwalden, stanen, etc. In these cases there is much difficulty in determining the singular and plural, since the forms are the same, both of the noun and article. There is one instance of the nom. in n, and another of the acc., namely studen (iii. 261) and sißen (i. 186).

⁸ wude is declined regularly, and in Anglo-Saxon, although it is assigned to the third declension by grammarians, yet we find it forming its gen. s. and nom. pl. according to the second. This is another proof, that the irregularities in Anglo-Saxon grammar became subsequently the established forms. Man is also irregular, but differs from the Anglo-Saxon declension, by having dat. s. in sne or nnen, as well as mon, man, and in the gen. pl. monnen-e and monnes as well as monne. This class of nouns is peculiarly instructive in tracing the gradual alteration of words to their present forms.

in the dative and accusative¹, especially the former, which, as Rask has remarked, affords the true origin of the termination in en of certain feminine nouns in German². In the plural, the nom. acc. and dat. end in en or e, and the gen. in ene. In the later text the plural termination nom. acc. is in es, instead of en. Several feminines are irregular, and have belonged to more than one order. Thus dohter and suster are partly undeclined, like the masculine Anglo-Saxon nouns of the third declension. So also hond often takes (as in Anglo-Saxon) no inflection in the dat. sing., but in the dat. pl. has in the earlier text the double form of en and es, like the masculines of the second declension. A few nouns have es in the gen. sing., as woruldes, welles, chirches, and the first of these is found in Anglo-Saxon. Other instances of irregulars, chiefly monosyllables, as boc, burh, niht, etc., may be found in the Glossary.

There are but few neuter nouns in Anglo-Saxon of the simple declension, and in Lazamon æjene, pl. seems to be the only example, the dative of which is not only æjen, ejen, as equivalent to the Anglo-Saxon eagum, but also æjene-n, ejene-n, by an additional syllable, and this form appears, improperly, in some other words³. The neuters of the complex order are numerous, and generally end in a consonant. They are declined like the masculine nouns, with the exception of forming the nom. and acc. sing. and pl. alike, as in Anglo-Saxon. Sometimes the acc. sing. takes an e, and, in a few instances, *n*⁴. The plural also has sometimes, in addition, the terminations of es, en and *e*⁵, in the earlier text, but in the later only es or e.

The genders of the nouns in the earlier text generally follow those in Anglo-Saxon, but in some cases seem at variance with them⁶. In the later text there is less conformity, and often the gender is wholly neglected, particularly of feminine nouns. Several instances occur in which a noun appears to be of two genders, of which some examples are pointed out in the note below⁷. Occasionally also the ¹ Occasionally an n is also assumed in the nom., as boten, dugeþen, eorþen, faren, ferden, laþen, Leinten (as in Anglo-Saxon), reoþen, seoþen, isunden; and it is remarkable, that of these instances only one (eorþen) is of the simple declension. A few fem. nouns also end in a consonant in the nominative, as weorlð, hond.

² Anglo-Saxon Grammar, p. 31.

³ As monenen (ii. 158), ʒifuenen (i. 158), bahuwenen (ii. 301), etc.

⁴ Examples are, hihten (ii. 488), huden (?) (ii. 440), wuelen (iii. 64).

⁷ Thus del, deal is neuter (i. 125, 127), but feminine (ii. 401), whilst in Anglo-Saxon it is masculine; niht is neuter (iii. 133), but in the same page and elsewhere feminine, as in Anglo-Saxon; wifmon is often feminine, but sometimes masculine, as in Anglo-Saxon, and once neuter (i. 147); tur is masculine (i. 341), as in Anglo-Saxon, but femilater text differs from the earlier in regard to gender, and sometimes on grounds above those of a purely arbitrary character¹.

Proper names generally follow the forms of masculine nouns. The only peculiarities worthy notice are, that the genitive in es is generally expressed in the later text by the pronoun *his*²; and that the dative singular often takes n in the earlier text. In names of Latin origin, the original form is sometimes admitted, as Eneam, Brutum, Pandrasum, Petreium, and at other times are undeclined, or take es in the genitive, as Claudiuses, Tennantiuses.

In compounds, the first word is usually undeclined, as in Anglo-Saxon, but occasionally the rule is not observed.

Adjectives of the indefinite declension follow nearly the Anglo-Saxon form, like the indefinite article, and retain in both texts the fem. gen. and dat. and masc. acc., but in the second text more rarely met with³. In the dat. m. and n. a final n is often taken in the earlier text⁴, and sometimes in the nom. sing.⁵ and nom. and acc. plural. The regular dat. pl. is in *en*⁶, but n is sometimes elided. When used definitely, after the definite article, a personal pronoun, or connected with the genitive case, an indeclinable e is taken, which is, in both texts, often neglected. Occasionally the definite form has the final n, as þas æðelen (ii. 464); þare æðelen (i. 3); and þene ælden (i. 38). The definite form is also sometimes found, where the ordinary rule would require the indefinite.

Comparatives and superlatives take e when used definitely, and in the plural; as in Anglo-Saxon they govern the noun following in the genitive case, a rule which continued throughout the period of Middle English.

The personal pronouns are the same as in Anglo-Saxon, but the use of the gen. sing. appears to have become obsolete, except in the possessive form. In a few nine (i. 332); þeode is generally feminine, as in Anglo-Saxon, but sometimes masculine (i. 109, 138, 306); sorþe and hæuene are generally feminine, but sometimes neuter (i. 316; ii. 75, 407); wil, wille is both feminine and masculine (ii. 405, 406, 408), and in Anglo-Saxon this noun is declined as of both genders. Some of these instances may, perhaps, be attributed to the errors of the scribe.

² See Glossar. Rem. vol. iii. p. 451. This form rarely occurs in the earlier text, but is in i. 175, 279. It must be observed also, that this mode of expressing the genitive is used in the later text sometimes with common nouns, as hem his, i. 375; dich his, ii. 241; king his, iii. 214.

⁶ Still preserved in the Kentish dialect, in 1340. MS. Arund. 57.

instances a or ha is found for he, heo, as in Robert of Gloucester, and the modern Western dialect. The gradual change from the Anglo-Saxon acc. hine to him is very perceptible in the later text, and is to be traced even in the Saxon Chronicle, ann. 1115, 1140. The plural forms of heo and *heore*¹ in the early text, are in the second hii and *hire*². The fem. heo, she, is in the later text seo or je, which approaches more nearly to the old Teutonic form si, sie, still preserved in German and Dutch. In the first text heo is often used in the accusative, for which the second text substitutes hire, as in modern usage. The dat. and acc. plural heom (rarely hem) become ham or jam in the later text, which occasionally, however, has the older form. Ham occurs only once in the first text (i. 142), and hem only once in the second (i. 24).

The dual form of the pronoun is preserved in the earlier text, as in Anglo-Saxon, but no trace of it occurs in the later³.

In the nom. plural of the second personal pronoun, both texts have je, ye, but the second sometimes seo, by error. The gen. is singularly varied, but the prevailing forms are eower, eowere, in the first, and your or ure in the second text. So also in the dat., eow becomes you, but with several variations; and in acc. eow, eow (once only seow, i. 232) becomes you, ou, which forms are never found in the earlier text.

The peculiar use of the dative pronoun after verbs of motion has been pointed out in the Glossarial Remarks, vol. iii. p. 445.

The possessives min, mi, and þin, þi, are declined as in Anglo-Saxon, and are used indifferently before consonants or vowels, but in the later text, the gen. m. and f., the dat. f. and gen. pl. are never met with, and their use must have become obsolete. In the dat. sing. and pl. the Anglo-Saxon um becomes e, but a final n once occurs in the early text (i. 125), as in the Germ. meinen.

The demonstrative þes or þeos, þas, þis, also follows the Anglo-Saxon model closely in regard to genders, although the forms are much varied and confounded. The later text generally avoids the gen. sing. in es, and the dat. fem.⁴, but even in Anglo-Saxon þisse was used in both these cases. The ancient termination in um becomes, as usual, en, but in the later text this is disregarded, and often the neuter undeclined þis substituted, as in modern English. The acc. m. is preserved in both texts, as it is to a later period, since we meet with it in Robert of Glou-

² In a few instances hi is found in the earlier text. In the Cottonian MS. of the Saxon Chronicle, Tib. B. I, and in Ingrams printed text, we have hi or hie, but in the Laud MS. written at a later period, heo. Yet heo or hio occurs in Anglo-Saxon charters as early as the years 743 and 821. op. Kemble, Cod. Diplomat. A.-Sax. vol. i. pp. 114, 222.

⁴ Yet in þissen þeoden (i. 306) the later text reads, more correctly, þissere, which proves the uncertainty in the use of this case.

center, and even in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, in the fourteenth century. The gen. pl. bissere occasionally also occurs in both texts¹.

The relative þa, þe (sometimes þeo) and þat, is used indifferently for who, which, that, and is generally followed by the subjunctive mood, as in Anglo-Saxon.

The pronouns they or those are expressed in the earlier text by *þeo*², both in the nom. and acc., which in the later becomes þaie or þaye.

While or wule, of the first text, takes the form of wocke in the second, which is undeclined, except in one instance, where the acc. termination wocþæ is found. The other pronominal adjectives follow the same rule as the indefinite declension of adjectives.

Seolf, self, sulf, the self, or same, is also inflected as in Anglo-Saxon³, and when united to a personal pronoun, the latter is often put in the dative⁴, and in such instances the nominative to the verb is always understood, and sometimes expressed⁵.

Ilke is used with the definite article to express the modern demonstrative that, and when þat is singly used before a noun, it is invariably the neuter article⁶.

The numerals adhere closely to the Anglo-Saxon forms. An or on has been already noticed as an article, declined like the indefinite adjectives. The distinction between the n. and f. twa, ba, and m. tweien, beien, is still observed, but the latter sometimes takes a final e, and also sometimes elides the n. The gen. and dat. cases of twa, the gen. of ba, and dat. of þreo are found in the earlier text, but not in the later. The compound ba-twa occurs likewise as ba-tweie, but in Anglo-Saxon is indeclinable. The numbers from four to twelve are usually undeclined, but also take e, and sometimes en, as wisen, æhten. Others elide the n, as seoue, siþe, elleoue. The Anglo-Saxon termination tig becomes ti, and is undeclined, yet we have þrittie in the dative. Hund is also undeclined, but hundred and þousand, like the neuter nouns, take es and e. The peculiar use of half after an ordinal number is still apparent, as oþer half hundred, one hundred and fifty. Ordinal

² Once by þi (i. 285). In the Semi-Saxon Legend of St. Katherine, it is þoa, p. 130. In Middle English this form became þo.

³ It takes n in the dat. sing. and pl., as in Anglo-Saxon we find sylfon, and in Germ. selben. The later text has only seolue or silue to express all the oblique cases. Nearly similar forms, however, as in the earlier text, existed certainly till the time of Chaucer. Cf. Grimm, Deutsche Gramm., th. iii. p. 5.

⁴ See Rask, Anglo-Saxon Grammar, p. 54.

⁵ Thus him seolf hafde (iii. 225), where he is understood; him seolf he cneouolde (iii. 189), where it is expressed. Sometimes a difference is found between the texts, as he seolf wende (ii. 170), where the later has him seolf; and heo seolf ne cunne (ii. 101), where heorn seolf is in the later. Hence may be explained the modern usage of such phrases as himself did it, he came himself, etc., which have puzzled the grammarians.

⁶ See Glossar. Rem., vol. iii. p. 450. In the doubtful line þet is þere quene scip (i. 194), the sentence may be resolved þet scip is þere quene, the ship is the queens (ship).

numbers, like the definite adjectives, take a final e, except oðer, which follows the indefinite declension. As in Anglo-Saxon, the higher numerals require a genitive case after them.

The verbs in Lazamon are conjugated as in Anglo-Saxon, with the usual vowel changes. The preposition to is commonly used before the simple infinitive, but the future participle or gerund in æse or æe, is also preserved, although confounded with the participial termination in *æde*¹. In the later text the final æ of the infinitive is generally omitted, as it is also sometimes in the earlier text. Occasionally the infinitive is governed by the verb which precedes, without a preposition, and, in the second text, as in Middle English, for is sometimes used for for to (i. 187, ii. 128).

In the present tense, the first person, as in Francic, often ends in n, the usage of which is still found in the Germ., Dutch and Friesic bin, I am². The second person, both of the present and past tense, sometimes drops the final *t*³, a form which is prevalent in Old Saxon, and is pointed out also by Thorpe as a peculiarity in the Exeter book. The plural of both texts regularly ends in *eð*⁴, except in the first and second persons, when followed immediately by a pronoun, when it ends in e, according to the Anglo-Saxon rule of grammar⁵.

In the past tense, the chief peculiarity is the frequent occurrence of a final n in the third person singular, both in strong and weak verbs, but chiefly the latter, as

¹ See Glossar. Rem. p. 452. This is more apparent in the second than the first text (i. 273), but also in both (i. 237, ii. 49), and similar instances are found in Anglo-Saxon, as to-sæcenne, Mark, iv. 3, where the Rushworth Gloss reads sawende. See Taylors Note on Div. of Purley, p. xxviii. In Anglo-Saxon also the future inf. is sometimes found in ene (Rask, p. 126), which was occasionally written as the simple form, as to secan, Cod. Exon. p. 217. So in Sax. Chron. wealden, a°. 1123. halden, a°. 1140; wunien, Grave Song, p. 142. sp. Thorpe. There can be no doubt, but that this practice gradually superseded the regular form of the fut. inf. and became the common form as at present used.

² The instances are, æseuen (ii. 285); beon (i. 168); ibiden (i. 141, ii. 560 et alib.); bi-læfuen (iii. 126); cumen (?) (ii. 314); demen (ii. 282); habben (i. 136 et alib.); hæten (ii. 285); hælin (iii. 294), but corrected by a second hand; hatten (ii. 528); ileuen (i. 186); wullen (i. 374, et scp.), but corrected once; ʒifuen (i. 406, ii. 478), but once corrected.

⁴ A few exceptions occur in t (i. 42, 140, 143), which seem attributable to the scribe. The third person singular of strong verbs also sometimes ends, as in Anglo-Saxon, in t for ð, as bi-falt (iii. 64); bi-tæket (i. 143); gilt (ii. 502); hawet (i. 140); halt (i. 140); walt (iii. 289). The form hæweðe (i. 141) is a blunder, as is treoweðe, 3 p. pl. (i. 145).

⁵ This e sometimes, but rarely, takes a final n, as fusen we (ii. 465); leten we (ii. 347); lakien we (ii. 33); biden ʒe (ii. 387); nabben ʒe (iii. 266). In the instances of biwinnen (i. 219), freollen, fallen (iii. 101), hæten (ii. 59), and wenden (iii. 91), the pronoun is understood, and it may be a question, if these are not infinitives, governed by an auxiliary verb not expressed. These forms are by no means to be confounded with the present subjunctive. The auxiliary shall has the double termination of eð and en in the plural, as have also occasionally the verbs, will and have (i. 142). Any other instances of en may be referred to the subjunctive or infinitive.

also, but rarely, in the first and second persons singular¹. In strong verbs the vowel is much varied, and the third person singular sometimes takes e, but these are exceptions to the general rule. In the plural, the final u of both orders of verbs is generally omitted in the later text, and occasionally in the first². Certain verbs in the earlier text occasionally take i (for ge) as a prefix, as imat, ihitte, *inom*³, where it is rarely or never so found in Anglo-Saxon.

Strong verbs of the third conjugation change, as in Anglo-Saxon, the vowel i of the infinitive and present tense into a or æ (o in later text) in the singular of the past, but resume i in the plural, as arisen, p. aras, pl. arisen; biten, p. bat, pl. biten; gliden, p. glad, pl. gliden, etc. In some instances the strong form of a verb has become weak, or both forms are used, as bæh and bogede; ferde and for; for-verde, pl. for-foren; for-læs, pl. for-leoseden; to-ræs, pl. to-ræden; læs and loosede; liðden and liðen; scop and scupte. Sometimes the weak form is found only in the later text, as walkede for weolken; iclemde for iclumben; and in a few instances the contrary takes place, as soch for sohte; and rongen for ringeden.

Several instances of a contracted form of the past tense of weak verbs occur in both texts, but chiefly in the first. These have been noticed in the *Glossarial Remarks*⁴.

In the imperative, both the second person sing. and pl. occasionally have a final u in the earlier text⁵. The same anomaly occurs in the second and third persons of the present tense subjunctive. It may be a question, however, whether some of these instances may not be an elliptical mode of speech, in which the infinitive is employed, with the auxiliary verbs let, may or should understood⁶. In the examples of wunien (ii. 109), beon (iii. 145), nimen and scriuen (ii. 347), afo and lunne (ii. 186), for-do (i. 350), the verb certainly seems to be in the infinitive mood, although in the sense of the subjunctive, and such may perhaps be the case with the phrases bat þu bilæuen (ii. 185); bat þu cumen (iii. 124); bat þu leten (ii. 24); bat þu liðen (iii. 25); buten þu raden (ii. 327), and often elsewhere. At the same time, it is scarcely to be denied, that in Anglo-Saxon the present indicative and subjunctive are clearly distinguished, and so they are often in Lazamon, particularly in the plural, as ind. hæreð (i. 404), sb. heren (ii. 205⁷).

¹ In the first person, ferden (i. 199); nusten (i. 152); seiden (i. 152); and wuden for wuneden (i. 145). In the second person, drogen (ii. 268); weren (i. 214, et alið.), but twice corrected; of-slozen (ii. 248); and tuzen (ii. 248).

³ Occasionally the reverse, as iswor (i. 146) where the first text has swor. The i in inom is also erased in the early text no less than five times.

⁷ The forms aʒen (i. 262); beon (ii. 348); ibiden (ii. 97); witen (i. 239, ii. 206) are

Occasionally the past tense of the subjunctive¹ in one text is expressed in the other in the mode above mentioned, as leouede (i. 148); griðede (iii. 247), where the second text reads loue wolde and griðe wolde; and sculden leosen (iii. 16), where the first text has loesede.

The conjugation in i is still clearly to be distinguished, as also the prevalence of the infinitive in i, ie, or y (by the elision of u), still retained in the western and southern dialects. In the later text no fewer than sixty-five verbs form the infinitive thus, of which number eleven are found likewise in the early text.

In Laxamon, as in Anglo-Saxon, certain transitive or weak verbs occur, formed from the preterites of strong neuter verbs, and the conjugations in general are kept distinct, although in some instances confounded². Such are ærnen and eornen; bærnen and beornen; feollen and fallen; leggen and liggen; þenchen and þunchen, etc.

The paradigms of the auxiliary or anomalous verbs be, have, can, may, shall, will and must, may be seen in the Glossary, and many of the preceding remarks will apply to them, particularly in regard to the use of the final u in the present and past tenses.

The use of the participle present is very limited, and only thirty-three instances are found in both texts, of which two-thirds are supplied by the earlier. The usual termination in the first text is in ende or ide, but three participles have the double ending ende and inge, and is once in inge alone. In the later text both terminations are also found, but the proportion of those in inge is nearly half³. Occasionally the later has ende, where the earlier reads inge.

Past participles of weak verbs, ending in d or t, take e in the plural, and in d often double the consonant, as adradde, amadde, awedde, ibredde, iðudde, iladde, etc., but in the later text the e or de is sometimes omitted. Participles of the strong conjugations, ending in en, take e or ne in the plural, and e in the singular, after a definite article. In the later text the final u is generally omitted, and not unfrequently in the earlier. As in the preterites, instances are found of the past participle in both forms of ed and en, as aþonged and aþeongen; bihonged and bihongen; ilad and iladden; ilimped and ilimpen; ileosed and iloren.

Adverbs, as in Anglo-Saxon, are variously formed, and reducible to the same classification. Very many, compounded of a preposition and a noun in the dative case, retain in the first text the final u, but sometimes omit it in the second. The presence of this u is often found, where it is not countenanced by Anglo-Saxon all to be referred to the prea. subjunctive, rather than the indicative, as entered in the Glossary.

¹ There is so much similarity in the use of the past tense ind. and sb. that in the Glossary they are entered together.

² See the Phil. Mus. vol. ii. p. 386; Rask, p. 113, and Latham, p. 261; also the Glossar. Rem. vol. iii. p. 470.

usage, as arewen, fæsten, hezen, ilomen, maren, inozen, raðen, sonen, swiðen, to-gæderen, to-somnen, bennen, þer-foren, þar-bin, wænnenen, wellen, ȝeornen, etc.¹, and it would seem that in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, this usage was very prevalent². Even in adverbs formed from adjectives the same anomaly is found, as biilichen (i. 191), mildelichen (i. 217), sikerlichen (i. 336). Instances of the genitive adverbs are seen in ænes, æies weies, alles, awæwardes, bi-halwes, bilifes, bi-sides, forð-rihtes, in-langes, nohtes, nihtes, rihtes, to-gaderes, to-mittes, unðankes, etc.³; whilst derived from the dative, we have diȝelen, lim-mele, þreoien, and whilen.

The prepositions are the same as in Anglo-Saxon, with the addition of a few forms which take a final n, as aneosten, bi-siden, bi-haluen, feorren, nazen, on-longen, etc. The rule of government also is in general conformable to the Anglo-Saxon grammar, but occasionally variable and neglected, especially in the later text⁴. In some instances there seems to be a departure from Anglo-Saxon usage, as an-long, on-longen, which governs the dative in Lazamon, whereas in Anglo-Saxon the genitive is always found after it. So also þurh, ȝeond and umbe govern both the dative and accusative, whilst in Anglo-Saxon they require the accusative only. There are a few exceptions to the general practice, as of bene (iii. 291); of heoren (i. 178); to þines lifes (iii. 144), but the first may be an error, and in Anglo-Saxon of and to sometimes have a genitive. The preposition is occasionally placed after its case, as he clupede him an (i. 198), separated from it by the intervention of other words.

Respecting the other parts of speech, it need only be noticed, that the conjunction buten (i. 30), and interjection wallan (i. 147), occur with a final n. With regard to an, used for if, the Glossarial Remarks may be consulted, vol. iii. p. 478.

The syntax in the earlier text closely resembles that of the Anglo-Saxon, but is not everywhere constant, and requires only brief remark. The use of the double dative is frequent, as leoden to harme (i. 109); frenden to blisse (i. 165); and in such phrases it is difficult to distinguish between the noun and the infinitive. Nouns of multitude are used with a verb in the plural, and mon or me occurs with the third person singular, as in the German, Dutch and French languages. Nouns of time used absolutely are in the accusative, as þene ðei longe (i. 241).

Comparatives and superlatives require a genitive case after them, as also the higher numerals. A few adjectives govern the genitive, as unismake (ii. 39, iii. 85); unimete (ii. 326); or dative, as iliche (ii. 296); and some both genitive and dative, as unilic (ii. 6, 116, 300).

¹ The Anglo-Saxon hwanon and þanon, whence, thence, occur as whannenen (ii. 154), and þenenen, þeonnenen (i. 310, ii. 286).

² In the English metrical translation of the romances of the Seynt Graal, Merlin, etc., of the fifteenth century, in MS. C.C.C.C. No. LXXX. þere-offen occurs throughout.

³ See Glossar. Rem. vol. iii. p. 460. Grimm, D. G. th. iii. p. 136.

⁴ The substitution of a preposition instead of the termination to denote a case, is perceptible often in the later text, as in Dutch. Thus for ȝena custi (i. 174) it reads of ȝeftes custi; and for þere ealdere suster (i. 162) it has of þe ealdre sotre.

Some verbs require also a genitive, as abiden, aswike, bruken, fainen, ipolien, wilnien, zemen, etc., and some a dative, as ahnien, bidden (iii. 204), bi-delen, bi-hehten, bi-nimen, bi-tæchen, fulien, heren (i. 327), ileuen, iquemen, setten, trukien, beinen, zetten, and several more, as also neuters and impersonals. After the auxiliaries would and should a verb of motion is often understood; and sometimes after a pronoun (ii. 463, iii. 91). The verbs cumen, ioitan, and some others, are frequently used also with a verb of motion in the infinitive, to express an action past. After certain prepositions, as þat, leste, bute, forte, 3if, the verb is found in the subjunctive, but not always.

It must be observed, in conclusion, that in regard to all these rules, the later text is seldom uniform, but exhibits everywhere the effects of a gradual desuetude of the original structure of the Anglo-Saxon forms of grammar.

There was a priest on earth, (or in the land,) who was named Laȝamon ; he was son of 'Leovenath [Leuca],—may the Lord be gracious to him !— he dwelt at Ernley, 'at a noble church [with the good knight] upon 'Severns bank [Severn],—'good [pleasant] it there seemed to him—near Radestone, where he books read. It came to him in mind, and in his 'chief' thought, woman, whom Paris Alexander with wily stratagem obtained; for her in one day a hundred thousand were dead! Out of the fight, that was exceeding fierce, Eneas the duke with difficulty escaped. He had but one son, who was safe with him; Ascanius he was named; he had no more children. And this duke with his retinue drew him to the sea, and of kin and of folk that followed the duke, of men and of goods that he to the sea brought, twenty good ships he goodly filled. And the ships fared wide over the wintry sea; from storms and from weather they suffered injuries, and with much distress they came to land. In Italy they came to land, where and offered her honor, that he would have her for a noble queen. Then came the word (report) to him, that was widely known, that the king Latin gave Lavine his daughter for a bride to Eneas; because she was his dear child. Then was Turnus sorry, and sorrowful in his mood, for he had loved her exceedingly, and pledged her love-thing. Turnus made war; with anger he was disturbed; against Eneas he took (engaged in) a fight that was exceeding strong; hand against hand fought the warriors; strife was in the conflict; there Turnus fell, with swords hewed to pieces;—his honor was the less! Eneas took Lavine lovingly to wife. He was king, with much worship took charge of this royal babe. Ascanius was brother of the child, but they had not one (the same) mother. His mother was named Creusa, daughter of king Priam, whom Eneas, his father, lost at Troy; his enemies took her from him in the [strong] fight. Ascanius held this kingdom days and years, and he made a noble burgh; Alba Longa it 'was' named. The burgh was well prepared 'within few years [in little time]; he gave it to his stepmother, for 'the' love of his brother, and Lavinion, the castle, that his father had made, 'the' while 'that' he was alive, and much land thereto; this land he granted her, 'until [to] her lifes end 'should come'. But he took the idol, 'that they accounted for God', that Eneas 'with his army' brought from Troy; in Alba Longa 'he' set it, but soon it thence went; 'forth' back with the wind the Fiend conveyed it. Ascanius the keen, who was in kings stead, he held the land and the people with bliss four and thirty winters; then came his lifes end, though it were loath to him. To Siluius his brother, who was Lavines son, he delivered all the land that Eneas their father had in hand. Ascanius had a son, who was named Siluius. This child had his uncles name; but 'few years [little while] he lived, for his own son 'subsequently' shot go 'from our enemies [out of the land].'' All that were present at this counsel, approved this communing. In Greece was a young man of thirty years of age, named Assaracus, of 'exceeding' high parentage. [His father was a rich knight, but he himself was very strong of might.] His father was a noble Greek, but his mother was born of 'Trojan race' [Troy], 'and she was a concubine,—her value was the worse!' 'Nevertheless' it befell [thereafter] within few years, that the father died; his people he quitted. He gave Assaracus, his son, three good castles, and all the adjacent land that thereabout lay. Assaracus had a brother, who was born in wedlock, after the heathen 'usage' [law] that 'was in the land [stood in that day].

This knight had his fathers land, and his brother was loath to him, because he held the strong castles, through his fathers stedfast gifts. His brother would take them from him, but he might not speed; there arose slaughter and strife, and many calamities! Assaracus was a good knight; against the Greeks he held many a fight, but he had much strength of his powerful [mothers] kindred, of the Trojan men, who were his mothers relatives; 'by reason of the law of affinity love was between them.' Assaracus advised it with secret communing, that the Trojan folk, with his full assistance, took the knight Brutus, and made him Duke, and 'he' their homage

If they will (wish to) obtain freedom, wonder thou not therefore;—they pray thee with friendship that thou set them free.' These words they send [forth] all as the letter 'saith [speaketh] 'to thee', that they may dwell wheresoever they will, in peace and in amity, and they will keep friendship with thee. If thou wilt not suffer this, the worse 'shall it be to thee [thou shalt be]!' The king took the letter in hand, and he wrathly beheld it; strange such speech seemed to him! Then he spake without reserve; with threats he said: "To 'their' destruction

'warriors [good knights] advanced towards Brutus, to his own destruction. They came together with great courage. There he might behold, who besides had been, many harms, frequent mishaps;—many a head, many a hand fell to the feet; many there fought; many took flight; 'many there fell through their evil conduct'! The Trojan men slew all the Greeks that they came nigh. There Brutus took Antigonus, brother of the king Pandrasus; with him he him led, for glad he was to have him. He caused him to be well secured with very strong bonds, and also his

Let the king sleep, and go we 'with good fortune, right' all as still as if we would steal, and I will lead you forth to 'my [mine own] lord 'at the woods edge, where he lies under bough'. If ye may bring him before our king, 'glad will he be of the offering, and to you it will be the better therefore [then may our lord boldly be glad]; 'because he is his brother,—for he hath none other'." Known he was to the knights, and they him recognised; they weened that his speeches were [all] true, but they all were leasings, for he was the betrayer of 'his' people. There is nowhere a man so wise,

They called to him, and loath words 'to him' said; 'they said that' he should 'be hung [hang high] 'on a high tree [upon great trees], or with horses [be] drawn to pieces, 'with grievous torments [over all the land], 'except he suffered them to depart free from his land', 'give them all his goods, that he might obtain, ["except thou wilt give us all thy goods,] and all 'his [thy] good ships that float in the sea-flood, and 'his [thy] daughter Ignogen, for a queen to 'their duke [our king]'. The king be-thought him what he might do; sorrowful he was alive! These tidings were loath to him, of death he had care, disturbed he was in mind.

made of marble stone, lofty and spacious, the Worse (Devil) had it to wield! Therein was an image of womans form; fair it was and very noble, by 'a [her] heathen name [she] was called Diana; the Devil loved her! She did wonder-crafts (magic); the Fiend assisted her! she was queen of all woods that 'grew [were] on earth; by the heathen laws men held (accounted) her for a high god. To her resorted 'the' wonder-crafty men, [to know] of the things that were to come, [which] she would make known to them, by tokens and 'by' dreams, when they were asleep. The while that in the island Folk was [men were] living, they worshiped the image; the Fiend it received!

Albion.

There is fowl, there is fish; there dwell fair deer; there is wood, there is water; there is much desert; the land is most winsome; springs there are fair; giants most strong dwell in the land; Albion is the land named, but men are there none. Thereto thou shalt proceed, and a 'New' Troy 'there' make; there of thy kin shall royal progeny arise, and 'thy powerful kin [through their might] shall [well] rule 'this [the] land; over 'the world [all lands] they shall 'be' celebrated, and thou 'be' whole and sound."—Then awoke Brutus; well was he alive! He thought 'of [on] his dream, and 'how [what] the lady said to 'him'; with much love he told it to his [dear] people, his blood and his brains both 'were' 'dashed' out [out thrust]. His companions fled very quickly to the king Goffar, and 'said' [told] to him sore tidings, that Numbert was slain,—'he' [who] was 'his own' [the kings] steward. The king was very sorry, and sorrowful in 'mood' [heart], and sent his messengers over [all] his kingdom; and gathered his host,—there were men fated! The army was assembled, and they marched forth towards [the] good Brutus, where he 'dwelt' [lay] by the sea [strand?]. Brutus was very wary, for wisdom accompanied him; spies he sent to the army of the king, to learn of his journeyings, where he would fight. 'The' [These] spies went, and soon returned, and came to their without the ſhips board, ere I ſend you plain word, whether I may have the upper hand of the king.” Brutus took his knights, and went forth right to that way ‘where [that] to him was advised, where the king would forth pass, with his great host. Together they came; fiercely ‘they’ on-smote (fought); there was most strong fight; the fated fell! there was many a ‘tall [bold] man with steel hewed in pieces; long ‘a-day’ lasted the fight, there fell many a good knight! Corineus advanced, and to himself said: “‘Away [Awake], Corineus! art thou not chosen knight? Shew now thy strength, and thy great might, and fell ‘this’ Poitou folk to the ground!”

hundred riders for companions; he turned back soon, and 'he' fought courageously. It was not long that Suard might stand, for Corineus approached to him with his good strength; he struck Suard on the head, so that he sought the ground, and he severed him in the middle, in two, right by the ribs. There was none so mighty, that longer might stand. Corineus cut them in pieces, their bones and ribs, and over [all] the land he drove them; many thousands there dead remained! The folk that fled from Corineus came to Brutus; and they slew all that they nigh came. The king Goffar saw his loss, and with difficulty 'himself' escaped. He fled out of his land, and left his people. Into France he went, there he friends found; to the emperor, and 'to' his twelve Companions; and told 'them [him] of the harm that Brutus had done him. In France were reckoned twelve Companions, the French called them dusȝepers, 'who were noble men; kings they were called;—that they oft made known'! They promised Goffar the king, that they would 'avenge [help] him, wreak him of his enemies, that he should be the easier. the land Touraine, through Turnus death. Brutus went out, and advanced to the fight; avenge he would his injury, 'and Turnus, his loved friend [of Turnus his death]. Together they came, and desperately fought; there was 'clash of falchion [many a stroke given], 'there was mickle bale,' and immoderate fight; 'there fell the fated! The battle was wondrous strong,' when Corineus came from the wood, with [his] powerful host 'to succour Brutus'. Brutus was on one half, Corineus on [the] other. They let [then] glide darts most sharp; they killed the French, all that they found. Thus they 'wasted [won] the land, and slew the people. The man was before Brutus. Brutus caused him to be secured in the best manner, in order to make trial of his great strength; to wrestle before Brutus, Geomagog and Corineus. Brutus it judged upon a down, upon the sea-cliff the folk 'came together [was gathered]. Forth came Corineus, and advanced himself, and the giant also, that all beheld it. There was many a man, there was many a woman, there was mickle folk at the wrestling! They yoked their arms, and made themselves ready; breast against breast—bones there cracked! They thrust out their 'shanks [legs], the heroes were strong!

Lud. This burgh he loved much ; ' the king dwelt in the burgh very many winters. He caused ' it ' loudly to be proclaimed over [all] his people, ordered it to be named Kaerlud, after ' the king [himself]. Afterwards came other dominion, and new customs, so that men called it ' Lundin [Lunden], over all ' this [the] country. Subsequently came English men, and called it ' Lundene [Londene]. ' Afterwards [Thereafter] came the French,—' who conquered it with fight,—with their country-manners, and Lundres it named. Thus has this burgh fared, since it first was reared; thus has this island passed from hand to hand, so that all the burghs that Brutus wrought, and their good names, that in Brutus day stood, are greatly destroyed, through Locrines love, who was her royal lord, who begat Abren upon Æstrild.

 Then had she slain the king, and the new queen, and their child; and this stream is yet called Auren; at Christchurch it falleth in the sea.
 Gwendoleine was most strong, for all Britain was in her hand; and she was so 'exceeding' well disposed, that to each man she did right; each man might pass through her land, though he bore 'red' gold [in hand].
 Ten years she was with Locrin; [and] oft 'she' had sorrow 'and pine';
 fifteen years and nine days after Locrin 'was dead [his departure] all Britain she governed, well with the best, in concord and 'in' peace; Joy was among [glad was] the people! Afterwards she gave Madan in hand

Madan, her son, took a wife, who was most fair; by her he had two sons, but they both were wicked. Membriz hight the 'elder [one], Malin the 'younger [other]. But 'their father' Madan with honor held his kingdom forty years, and when his lifes end came, he thought most well to do; he set all 'his' rich kingdom in the hand of his two sons. But when their father was dead, the sons did evil counsel; between them arose conflict and strife,—adversaries they were both,—slaughter, and much sorrow; all for their wickedness! On the day that was set then came they together. Membriz had 'accepted the peace, but soon he made war [appointed the day, and on the day he did his wont]; he did there sorrow enow, 'for there' he slew his [own] brother; and thus he won all this land, so that it stood in his own hand. And the' women of Lumbardy were most odious to them, therefore the king sent after these maidens, to give [them all] to his rich men; so he did, and thus it was; woe was the Lumbard folk for this! Then had the king Silvius his will [of Lombardy], 'and Lumbardy he ruled, and all his Trojan kin drew to himself.' Some of 'the brothers,' 'Ebraucs [Eubrac his] sons, 'came [went] 'thither' with their sisters. They procured weapons, they procured ships; they procured men that could advise them; they sent and thou me lovest greatly, more than [all that] is in life! I will divide all my lordly land in three; thine 'is [shall be] the best share; thou art 'my daughter dear [to me most dear], and [thou] shalt have for lord my all-best 'thane [man] that I may find in my kingdom." Afterwards spake the old king with his [second] daughter: "Loved daughter Regau, what sayest thou me to counsel? Say 'thou' before my people how dear I am to thee 'in heart'." Then answered [she] with 'prudent' words [and not with heart]: "All that is in life is not [half] so dear to me as is to

Then answered the king—his daughter pleased him—"The third part of my land I give to thee in hand; [and] thou shalt take a lord (husband) where to thee is most agreeable." Yet would not the king his folly leave; he bade his daughter Cordoille come before him. She was youngest of all, of 'truth most studious [words truest of all], and the king loved her more than 'both' the other two. Cordoille heard the leasings that her sisters said to the king. 'receive her [do to her]. Then took the old king 'his noble maiden [Gordouille the maid], with her sole 'clothes [clothing], and let her forth pass over 'the' [sea] streams;—her father was stern 'to her'! Aganippus, the French king, received [fairly] this 'maiden [maid] 'child,' [and] to all his folk it was pleasing, and they made her queen [that she were queen]; and thus she there remained; dear she was to the people. And king Leir, her father, lived in this land, and had 'given' his two daughters all his kingdom; he gave Gornoille to 'Scotlands [the Scottish] king—he hight Maglaunus, his powers were great—[and] to Cornwall's duke he gave Regau, his daughter. Then befell it subsequently, soon thereafter, that the Scottish the same time here came a strange token, such as 'before' never came, 'nor' never hitherto since. From heaven 'here' came a marvellous flood, three days it rained blood, three days and three nights; that was exceeding great harm [a well wonderful sight]! When the rain was gone, here came another token anon. Here came black flies, and flew in mens eyes; in their mouth, in their nose, [so that] their lives went all to destruction; such multitude of flies here was, that they ate 'the' corn and 'the' grass. Woe was all the folk, that dwelt in the land! Thereafter came such a mortality, that few 'here' remained alive. Afterwards here came an evil hap, that 'king' Riwald died. King Riwald had a son, named Gurgustius;

[came] against him; much anger was there, by the wood of Kalatere, where they them (each other) met, and evilly them greeted. Together they came, 'they soon approached together (?)'; fiercely they fought, '[and] by thousands 'they' fell! Well fought king Belin—so did his Britons—they were most valiant men, the field they won! Brennes retreated from them, and with his folk he fled, all toward the sea, with much misfortune; and Belin pursued after them, and laid 'them' adown;—sixty thousand he laid to the ground! Brennes found a ship standing by the shore; he entered said to him sooth, that Brennes, his brother, had sought his realm, with innumerable host had arrived in his land. Belin 'caused men to be summoned [sent his messengers] over all his 'land [kingdom]; and bade all 'the [his] warriors that 'within sea [in the land] dwelt, that they should come to his need, to drive out the strangers. Ready was the army, and forward [they] marched; 'they came so nigh the two hosts [there was between them but a mile]. Then yet lived 'the old queen, [her mother, who was] a woman 'wise and 'keen; she was named Tonuene; she bare Belin [and Brennes. This old queen was so (very) wise] 'and' that she well shewed;

Belin the king. All the magistrates that dwelt in Rome, 'and all the rich men that governed the burgh of Rome,' had selected two earls, in that same year, who should guard the land, and govern the people, and lead their army where ever it were need. For I will tell 'thee [you] both their names; the one hight Gabius, the other Prosenna. These same earls were [very] keen, 'brave men and excellent,' and all the Romanish folk acted by their counsel. These earls came to Rome, to the 'men [folk] of counsel (the Senate); they asked them counsels of such necessity, whether they should summon forces to fight with Belin, or speak (hold conference) with

Now I have said to thee how it is transacted in respect of Kaer-Liun in Glamorgan; go we yet (again) to Belin, to the blissful king. When he had made this burgh, and 'named [called] it Kair-Uske, when the burgh was strong and fair, then gan he thence fare; 'he proceeded' right to London, the burgh he loved greatly. He began there a tower, the strongest of all the town, and with much art a gate thereunder made. Then men called it Belins-gate (Billingsgate); now and ever more the name standeth there. people loved him exceedingly. In his days was so much meat, that it was without measure! 'The folk through their drink (drunkenness) by many thousands perished!' The king lived long, until it came toward his ending, that in London he was dead. Sorry was his people, woe was to them in life for the king's death! They went to his hoard, and took there [took of his treasure] a great deal of gold; they made a 'tun [tomb] of gold and of gems; the king they placed therein, 'who was' their lord, Belin; 'they raised him up high on the upmost part of [and laid him with honor high in] the tower, so that men might him behold wide over [over all] the land. Alfred 'said [made] it in English ;—'this [that] is [the] sooth full certainly. This wise queen had by her worldly king a little son, named Sillius ; 'she [he] had children no more, therefore was the queen woe ! This child Sillius had but seven years of age, when his father was dead, and his men quitted. His mother took [all] this kingdom [in her hand], 'and with counsel governed it,' and brought up her son well 'ever' with herself. Argal the king, [and] 'wretched [sorry] in his mood; sorrowful in heart for his great harms. Argal bethought him what he might do; that he would fare again (return), and try his brother, and whether he might of his men any grace find. It was 'about' five winters 'after that he hence went [that he was out driven], 'after he this sorrow had built for himself; 'then he caused himself to be disguised, and [in strange wise he] came to this land; with his own kin he made him a stranger; no man 'ever' knew him, that ere had him seen. Julius.

the day was 'light [well bright], and the sun 'was most bright [gave her light]; and Cæsar 'rode over [went on] Flanders land, 'and viewed the [wandering by] sea strand. The weather was exceeding mild, and he descried this land. Then 'inquired [said] Julius, and with the folk he spake thus: "What is that same 'island [land], that I see with eyes, far over sea-stream; fair it seemeth to me?" A wise man 'quoth thus, and with the emperor spake [there was, who to the king said]: "That is a 'great' island, of 'each [all] good thing it is strong (stored), that Brutus first won [after the flood. There is fish, there is fowl]; there are 'doughty [keen] and think with what deeds thou mayest defend thy people." Then was sorry the king Cassibelaune, and caused quickly [all] his trumpets to be blown, [and] 'the [these] tidings new 'come' to be made known to his knights, 'that [how] Julius the emperor with [all] his Romanish host was there right arrived, and the haven 'at [of] Dover had taken. Then said the king Cassibelaune: "London we must leave, and to Dover march; assemble your forces, and go 'we' quickly." Forth went the king with innumerable folk, right toward Dover, to his great disadvantage! That heard Julius Cæsar,—he was wise and most wary,—that

'This man was bold, this was strong, this was stiff in thought ; this knew all the ordinances 'that stood in [hence to Rome] ; but he lived not long,—that was 'harm to his people [much grief] !—' but the while that he lived, his land he held in bliss.' 'Coil the king, [But he] 'who was Britains prince,' had a 'dear' son, named Luces. 'This was the best man that ever 'had [ruled] kingdom, since to Britain came 'the' Britons who obtained it. Luces was royally born, Luces was well 'instructed [chosen], and he was most 'worthy [just] :—the Britons loved

Through this 'same' 'noble [good] man this land received Christendom;—the man that will 'listen [hear] 'how it first befell,' this book will 'say [tell] to him, 'sooth words,' how Luces the king first worshiped Christ. Excellent men came out of Rome, they came to the king, and told him tidings of all the proceeding that Petrus did in Rome, and what martyrdom Petrus had 'received [taken on him], 'and the other saints, who were high with God.' Then longed Luces the king exceedingly, ere he knew more of the Lord Christ.
